“County Resolution Endorses Legislation Prohibiting Minor Sex Reassignment”

Ellis County, TX – At their March 4th meeting, Ellis County Commissioners unanimously signed a resolution supporting all current Texas bills intended to restrict the exposure of children to obscene material or to prohibit medical interference with the natural, sexual development of children. The resolution recognizes April as Child Abuse Prevention Month and declares that “to deliberately expose children to sexually-explicit material in such a way that confuses their natural identity, or to deliberately impede their natural development, constitutes child abuse.”

“We must protect our next generation from those who intentionally confuse the sense of God-given, biological identity of children,” said County Judge Todd Little. “In recent months, we have seen an increased effort by activists to target our children, the most innocent and impressionable among us, with sexually-explicit material they have no business seeing. Ultimately, exposure at such a young age could impede their healthy mental development with life-altering consequences.”

Currently, more than two-dozen bills have been filed in both the Texas House and Senate, including by legislators representing Ellis County, to restrict the distribution or display of sexually-explicit material to children. Similar bills have been introduced to criminalize chemical or surgical interference with the natural, sexual development of minors. The Ellis County resolution endorses all of them and calls upon Texas lawmakers to “stand firmly by all bills safeguarding the innocence, emotional development, and natural growth of our children.”

“This is not about ‘sex education’ or hormone therapy,” said Little. “This is about responding to a disturbing movement in our society that seeks to cause all children to question their biology and to normalize obscenity under the guise of ‘inclusiveness.’ The future of any great nation rests largely upon the hope of its next generation, and as elected officials, we stand firmly against these predations against the healthy development of all children.”
